

Index

- antecrysts 134, 135
- Aolian Islands 34
- Cathedral Peak Granodiorite 203–204
 - conclusions 230–231
 - discussion 223–225
 - compositional variation 226–230
 - internal contacts 225–226
 - field relations and petrography
 - aplitic dykes 209
 - Cathedral Peak petrography 209–211
 - interaction zones 211–214
 - ladder dykes 211
 - magmatic fabrics 215–216
 - magmatic faults 215
 - microgranitoid enclaves 209
 - potassium feldspar concentrations 214
 - Schlieren 209
 - geological setting 204–205
 - method
 - analytical methods 205
 - geochronology 206–209
 - isotope data 212
 - major element oxides by XRF 207
 - mineral chemistry of plagioclase 205–206
 - sampling strategy 205
 - trace elements by ICP–MS 210–211
 - trace elements by XRF 208
 - U–Pb zircon data 213
 - results
 - feldspar chemistry 221–223
 - geochemistry 216–218
 - Sr and Nd isotopes 218–221
 - U–Pb geochronology 223, 224
- crustal thickness 18–19
 - correlation with lava dome proportion 21, 23–25
- crystal populations 133
 - combined textural analysis
 - approach 138–139
 - crystal size distributions 140
 - dihedral angles 140–143
 - Kameni enclaves 140
 - Santorini volcano 139–140
 - spatial distribution patterns 140
 - composition 133–134
 - antecrysts 134, 135
 - final texture 134–136
 - microlites 134, 135
 - phenocrysts 134, 135
 - xenocrysts 134, 135
 - conclusion 145
 - future developments
 - linking textures with microgeochemical analysis 145
 - textural analysis 143–145
 - quantifying textural parameters 136
 - crystal shapes 136
 - crystal size distribution 136–137
 - dihedral angles 138
 - spatial distribution patterns (SDPs) 137–138
 - crystal size distribution, three dimensional 48
- differentiation, uniform processes 261–262
 - conclusions 279–280
 - discussion
 - implication for crustal growth 275–276
 - melt differentiation processes 276–279
 - geological setting 262
 - results
 - amphibole 268–271
 - apatite 271
 - clino- and orthopyroxenes 267–268
 - crystallization pressure 274–275
 - crystallization temperature 273
 - Fe–Ti-oxides 271–273
 - glass compositions 264–266
 - mineral chemistry 266–275
 - oxygen fugacity 273–274
 - plagioclase 266–267
 - samples and analytical methods 262–263
 - preparation 263–264
 - diffusion in a spherical grain 251
- equilibrium fractionation factor 251
- Fourier's law 22
- gas phase exsolution 50
- Gibbs free energy 62
- Global Volcanism Program (GVP) 16
 - reliability of eruption style data 20–22
- Hawaiian tholeiite basalt 51–52
- irregular arcs 16
 - magma migration 26
- Izu Bonin volcanic arc 261–262
 - conclusions 279–280
 - discussion
 - implication for crustal growth 275–276
 - melt differentiation processes 276–279
 - geological setting 262
 - results
 - glass compositions 264–266
 - mineral chemistry 266–275
 - samples and analytical methods 262–263
 - preparation 263–264
- Kilauea volcano 83
 - background and previous work 83–87
 - tectonics and plumbing system 85
 - conclusions 111

- Kīlauea volcano (Continued)
- interpretation 103
 - eruption types and eruption rate 110–111
 - Halema'uma'u eruption 103–106
 - magmatic history 106–109
 - seismicity along magma supply path 109–110
 - significance of intrusion types 110
 - observations
 - eruption efficiency 94
 - eruption periods 91
 - precursory sequences to eruption and intrusion 92–94
 - seismic and deformation history 95–103
 - seismic and tilt sequences 94–95
 - seismic and tilt data 87–88
 - eruption and intrusions 90, 91
 - limitations on quantitative analysis of magma supply 91
 - map 88
 - Uwekahuna tilt data analysis 88–91
 - study assumptions 87
 - tilt and volume changes over eruptive cycles 112–114
- lava dome proportion 16
 - correlation with crustal thickness 21, 23–25
 - correlation with plate convergence rate 22, 23–25
 - correlation with surface heat flux 20, 22–23
- linear elastic fracture mechanics (LEFM) 73–74
- magma chamber, short-lived stratified 149, 166
 - analytical methods 151–152
 - discussion 162
 - inferred magmatic processes 165–166
 - petrological features of andesitic end-member magmas 162–163
 - petrological features of basaltic andesite magmas 163–164
 - petrological features of basaltic end-member magmas 163
 - three magmas for tephra layers 162
 - geological features of tephra layers 151
 - geological outline of Zao volcano 149–151
 - mineral chemistry 155
 - glass inclusion compositions 157–158
 - Z-To5 layer 155–157
 - Z-To6 and 7 layers 157
 - petrography of tephra layers 152
 - Z-To5 layer 152–154
 - Z-To6 and 7 layers 154–155
 - whole rock compositions 158–162
- mantle to crust magma transfer in volcanic arcs 15–16
- conclusions 27
- findings 20
- $^{238}\text{U}/^{230}\text{Th}$ disequilibria 24
 - correlation with surface heat flux 22–23
 - geochronological evidence 25–26
 - magma migration in irregular arcs 26
 - reliability of GVP eruption style data 20–22
- methodology
 - arcs with Holocene effusive eruptions 17
 - average viscosity determination 16
 - crustal thickness 18–19
 - plate convergence rate 19
 - surface heat flux 18
 - volcanic arc characterization 16–18
- results 19–20
- microlites 134, 135
- phenocrysts 134, 135
- plate convergence rate 19
 - correlation with lava dome proportion 22, 23–25
- Poiseuille equation 72
- Popocatepetl volcano 117
 - conclusions 130
 - discussion
 - dome evolution 128–129
 - magmatic plumbing 128
 - magnetic anomalies 127–128
 - observations
 - seismicity 120–122
 - volcanic activity 119–120
 - study methods
 - eruptive activity 117–118
 - magnetic signals 122–127
 - magnetism 118
 - seismicity 119
 - spring water 122
 - spring water and ash 119
- random sphere distribution line (RSDL) 138
- regular arcs 16
- Santorini volcano 139–140
 - Kameni enclaves 140
 - crystal size distributions 140
 - dihedral angles 140–143
 - spatial distribution patterns 140
- Sciare del Fuoco 35–36, 37
- silicic magma production rates 169–170
 - amphibole, role of 174
 - conclusions 179
 - effect of recharge 175
 - model I – mixing before eruption 170–171
 - model II – melt assimilation during differentiation 171–174
 - physical implications 175–179
- sill growth model 72–74
- Snake River Plain – Yellowstone (SRPY) 235–236
 - basalt intrusion in middle–upper crust 244
 - discussion and summary 254–256
 - fundamental characteristics of magmatic province
 - crustal and mantle rhyolites 242–244
 - rhyolite compositional variation 239
 - rhyolite petrology and temperature 238–239
 - rhyolite source 239–241
 - volcano-tectonic overview 236–237
 - volume and scale of rhyolite systems 237–238

- oxygen isotopic constraints on rhyolite genesis
 - diffusivity and fractionation factor coefficients 252
 - oxygen isotope problem 250–251
 - theoretical considerations 251–252
- physical models 244
 - magma reservoir model 244–246
 - thermal models for rhyolite generation 246–250
- spatial distribution patterns (SDPs) of crystals 137–138
- Stromboli volcano 33–34
 - analytical methods 38
 - bulk composition and glass chemistry 44–48
 - conclusions 59–62
 - crystal size distribution and intrabubble distances 48–50
 - golden pumice 51
 - scorias and lavas 50–51
 - geological setting and volcanological outline 34–35
 - eruptions, historic and current 36–38
 - geological map 36
 - structural framework 35–36
 - volcano 35
- melt and magma viscosity 51–53
- petrography and mineral compositions 38–44
- petrology and phase relationships 53–54
- plumbing system and magma chamber shape 57–59, 60
 - P–T* path summary 58
- thermobarometric constraints 54–57
- surface heat flux 18
 - correlation with lava dome proportion 20, 22–23
- Tamman–Vogel–Fulcher (TVF) 51–53
- Tindari–Letojanni fault system 34
- Tuolumne Batholith (TB) 203–204
 - conclusions 230–231
 - discussion 223–225
 - compositional variation 226–230
 - internal contacts 225–226
 - field relations and petrography
 - aplitic dykes 209
 - Cathedral Peak petrography 209–211
 - interaction zones 211–214
 - ladder dykes 211
 - magmatic fabrics 215–216
 - magmatic faults 215
 - microgranitoid enclaves 209
 - potassium feldspar concentrations 214
 - Schlieren 209
 - geological setting 204–205
 - method
 - analytical methods 205
 - geochronology 206–209
 - isotope data 212
 - major element oxides by XRF 207
 - mineral chemistry of plagioclase 205–206
 - sampling strategy 205
 - trace elements by ICP–MS 210–211
 - trace elements by XRF 208
 - U–Pb zircon data 213
 - results
 - feldspar chemistry 221–223
 - geochemistry 216–218
 - Sr and Nd isotopes 218–221
 - U–Pb geochronology 223, 224
- Tuolumne Intrusive Suite (TIS) 183–184
 - discussion
 - low-temperature mineral equilibrium 193
 - origin of chemical variation 193–195
 - significance of mapped plutonic units 198–199
 - source of isotopic variability 195–198
 - spatial and temporal variations in composition 193
 - time–space patterns of geochemical variation 198
 - geological setting 184–186
 - petrology
 - major- and trace-element geochemistry 188–190
 - methods 186
 - mineral chemistry 186–188
 - radiogenic isotope geochemistry 191–193
 - thermobarometry 188
 - summary 199
- viscous dissipation in sill growth 71–72
 - conclusions 79–80
 - implications for numerical modelling 78
 - implications for sill thickness prediction 78–79
 - near-tip region 74–75
 - propagation regime 75–76
 - sill growth model 72–74
 - sill growth regime 77–78
- volcanic arcs, first-order observations 15–16
 - conclusions 27
 - findings 20
 - $^{238}\text{U}/^{230}\text{Th}$ disequilibria 24
 - correlation with surface heat flux 22–23
 - geochronological evidence 25–26
 - magma migration in irregular arcs 26
 - reliability of GVP eruption style data 20–22
 - methodology
 - arcs with Holocene effusive eruptions 17
 - average viscosity determination 16
 - crustal thickness 18–19
 - plate convergence rate 19
 - surface heat flux 18
 - volcanic arc characterization 16–18
 - results 19–20
- Williams expansion 73–74
- xenocrysts 134, 135
- Zao volcano 149, 166
 - analytical methods 151–152
 - discussion 162
 - inferred magmatic processes 165–166
 - petrological features of andesitic end-member magmas 162–163
 - petrological features of basaltic andesite magmas 163–164
 - petrological features of basaltic end-member magmas 163
 - three magmas for tephra layers 162

Zao volcano (Continued)

geological features of tephra layers 151
geological outline 149–151
mineral chemistry 155
 glass inclusion compositions
 157–158

Z-To5 layer 155–157
Z-To6 and 7 layers 157
petrography of tephra layers 152
 Z-To5 layer 152–154
 Z-To6 and 7 layers 154–155
whole rock compositions 158–162